

Indigenous Training Scholarship Telephone Support Worker Training

*Are you a worker who helps women with issues like domestic violence,
sexual assault, housing and family law?
Or would you like to be?*

WIRE women's information is a not-for-profit organisation that has been providing free, confidential information, support and referrals to Victorian women for 25 years.

WIRE runs a training course for our phone support workers three times a year. We would like to support an Indigenous woman, currently working, or thinking about working with women, by offering them a free place in our next course starting on 6th October 2010.

The training is held at 210 Lonsdale Street, Melbourne for up to one full day per week for eight weeks. You will:

- learn more about a range of issues affecting women today.
- learn how WIRE's model of working with women could help you to deal with these issues with more confidence.
- take part in professional development that will earn you 6 units of competency from the Community Services Training Package.

Interested? Please register to attend a training program orientation session on 1st or 2nd September 2010 by phoning 1300 134 130.

You must attend an orientation session to be considered for a place in the program.
